1.0 Introduction

Present the background, problem context, evidence gap, purpose of the study, and relevance to applied science, medicine, health, or social sciences.

2.0 Literature Review

Synthesize current scholarship thematically. Identify knowledge gaps and show how the study contributes to the field.

3.0 Materials and Methods

Describe study design, setting, population, sample size, sampling method, data collection instruments, validity, reliability, ethical considerations, and analysis plan.

4.0 Results

Present findings clearly using text, tables, and figures. Avoid repeating all table values in prose; highlight the most important patterns.

Table 1: Example table title

Variable	Indicator	Measurement	Analysis
Independent variable	Exposure / predictor	Scale / category	Descriptive / inferential
Dependent variable	Outcome	Scale / category	Regression / comparison
Control variables	Covariates	Age, sex, setting	Adjusted analysis

5.0 Discussion

Interpret the findings in relation to existing literature, theory, policy, practice, and the study objectives.

6.0 Conclusion and Recommendations

State the main conclusion, practical implications, recommendations, limitations, and areas for future research.

References
